

Dear Mary and the Azira Team,

When I read your description of the Director, Chief of Staff & Business Operations role, it felt remarkably familiar, not because I've held that exact title, but because I've spent my career doing exactly what you're looking for: bringing structure to complexity, building operating systems, and helping leadership teams turn strategy into consistent execution.

Across healthcare, laboratory operations, e-commerce, and technology-enabled businesses, I've been trusted to step into rapidly growing organizations, identify the operational constraints limiting performance, and build the systems, governance, and accountability needed to scale. Whether redesigning organizational structures across eight locations, creating enterprise-wide quality and operational frameworks, leading cross-functional strategic initiatives, or building software and analytics tools that improved executive decision-making, my focus has always been the same: help good organizations execute better.

What excites me most about this opportunity is that it isn't a traditional Chief of Staff role. It's about becoming the connective tissue of the organization, aligning executives, translating priorities into action, removing friction, and building operating rhythms that allow talented teams to perform at their highest level. That work is where I do my best.

While my experience comes from regulated scientific, healthcare, and marketplace organizations rather than SaaS alone, the underlying challenge has been remarkably consistent: translating complexity into clarity, designing scalable operating systems, and helping organizations execute with discipline while remaining adaptable.

I'd welcome the opportunity to discuss how my background and operating philosophy could help Azira continue to scale while maintaining the culture and agility that make growing companies successful.

Thank you for your time and consideration.

Evan Parnell
